1 in 5 Canadians will experience a mental health problem or illness this year.²

A majority of employees surveyed (60%) note that emotional/interpersonal issues are the top source of workplace stress.³

Mental health is the number one cause of disability claims in Canada.²

Over the next 10 years, current mental health issues in the GTHA labour force could result in almost $17 billion in lost productivity³

There are now 3,800 highly trained Registered Psychotherapists in Ontario available to meet the growing need for psychotherapy in our province.¹

Omission of Registered Psychotherapists from your insurance coverage limits workers access to government-regulated practitioners who are qualified and available.

There is a mental health crisis across Canada

- People with mental health challenges are not finding access to the help they need, or they are told that it will be months before they can have an assessment or begin therapy! These challenges make it harder for them to perform effectively on the job.
- The Ontario Provincial Government proclaimed the College of Registered Psychotherapists of Ontario (CRPO) on April 1, 2015, guaranteeing professional assurance for citizens seeking mental health services through Registered Psychotherapists in Ontario.¹
- You can protect and improve the productivity of your organization and the health of your workers by including Registered Psychotherapists (RPs) in the list of approved providers of your employee health benefit plans. With more workers having access to mental health care through psychotherapy, you can reduce the overall costs of untreated mental health concerns in your organizations.

What is a Registered Psychotherapist (RP)?

- A Registered Psychotherapist is authorized to treat, by means of psychotherapy technique delivered through a therapeutic relationship, an individual's serious disorder of thought, cognition, mood, emotional regulation, perception or memory that may seriously impair the individual's judgement, insight, behaviour, communication or social functioning.
- RPs specialize in psychotherapy, provide employees access to an broader range of therapy modalities, geographic coverage and fees.

How does this affect benefits?

- Insurance companies have given the green light to include RPs in health benefit plans from a risk perspective. Employers just need to request they be added.
- Your benefit plans can now include Registered Psychotherapists as extended health providers, just as they do with Psychologists and Social Workers.
- While the insurance benefit itself may be limited, providing it removes an initial barrier to therapy. Once exhausted, the employee may choose to reprioritize their expenses in order to continue the therapy and further improve their well being.

What's in it for Employers:

- Increase productivity and engagement
- Reduce the occurrence of STD and LTD
- Early intervention is key, and RPs are an early intervention option
- Enhance workplace psychological health
- Offer a more attractive benefit package for employees
- Intervention/access saves money in the long run by mitigating liability/workplace safety issues

Registered Psychotherapists are part of the solution. Include them in your benefit package today!
